The Influence of Color on the Perception of Scene Gist

Film Theory [9] advocates that color perception and lighting are important contributors to the mood tones the director wants to bring forward in any scene in addition to dialogues, storyline, actors, etc. Color can also be used to create particular surprising or artistic effects (e.g. Kieslowski's "Blue," "White" and "Red").

Color-Mood Analysis of Films Based on Syntactic and

Abstract. Two experiments were conducted to study how scene complexity and cues to depth affect human color constancy. Specifically, two levels of scene complexity were compared. The low-complexity scene contained two walls with the same surface reflectance and a test patch which provided no information about the illuminant.
